Most people don't want to talk about it or deal with death, but when it happens what do you do? Learn valuable insights into the funeral industry. What you need to know in handling human remains. How do you deal with family members, or what if there is no family and the person is indigent. What are the various forms of disposition? Learn about anatomical donation, cremation and burial, including green burials. What benefits are available for a veteran and what paperwork do you need? What information is needed for a death certificate and who processes it. How to choose a cemetery. What you need to know before entering a large corporate funeral home. What is the advantage to pre-planning, and should it be insurance or a trust.

SPEAKER: Deborah and Ron Threadgill are funeral directors who own Threadgill Memorial Services. They have been in the funeral industry for almost 10 years, having previously co-owned another funeral home. Ron has a background in financial planning and estate planning. has been a CNA and is a celebrant. He brings a unique perspective to his role as funeral director. Deborah has been the president of several women's organizations and also brings a unique perspective to interacting with families. Because they are the owners, they are also the decision makers and can be unconventional when necessary in helping families. Among some of their unusual dispositions have been a burial at sea, several wakes, and a green burial. They love what they do and feel like they make a difference in the lives of the families they serve. Ron loves to empower people through knowledge, especially in divulging information that the corporate funeral homes don't want you to know.
